

Dear ciliatologists,

The University of Sevilla along with the University of Malaga (both universities at the south of Spain) has built a consortium, called Andalucía Tech, under the auspices of the spanish government (International Excellence Campus Program)

One action of Andalucia Tech is recruitment of talent and the University of Sevilla has just now opened a offer for recruiting both senior and young researchers.

I will support applications from young researchers (more than two years postdoc) with high scientific record in Microbiology. The University offers excellent working conditions during four years (including a predoc student) and I complement this offer with space in my laboratory and starting financial support for those research projects in protistology in general and ciliatology in particular.

Contact information

Dr Eduardo Villalobo

e-mail: evpolo@us.es